

FEE DETERMINATION SCALE

The amount paid for mental health services is determined using the Department's "Sliding Fee Scale." After the adjusted income is calculated, the client or family percentage of the cost of mental health services is determined according to household size.

Instructions: Navigate to the appropriate column based on the household size. Then use the adjusted gross family income to determine which row and corresponding percentage will be client responsibility.

For families with more than 8 persons in the household, please contact your Health and Welfare office for the client percentage.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

The Department of Health and Welfare (DHW) uses state and federal funds to provide a variety of mental health services.

The Idaho legislature has authorized DHW to determine the financial responsibility of adult clients and the parents of child clients.

Adult clients and parents of child clients are responsible for providing this information when filling out a “Fee Determination Form” prior to the delivery of services.

Financial responsibility is based on income, family size, and allowable deductions including the following: court ordered obligations, childcare necessary for employment, medical expenses, transportation necessary for travel to work and other specific destinations, extraordinary rehabilitative expenses, and state and federal tax payments.

Parental share of costs associated with placing a child in foster care or other alternate-care setting is determined through the Child Support Services program using Idaho Child Support Guidelines.

Adult clients or parents of a child client are responsible for the percentage that is determined through the sliding fee scale. For example, if a family of 4 earns $33,000 gross income annually and they have $5,000 in allowable deductions annually; the family’s adjusted annual income would be $28,000. Using the adjusted annual income on “Fee Determination Scale”, the family would be responsible for 10% of the fee for mental health services. If the individual received a psychiatric diagnostic evaluation, the financial responsibility would be $9.90.

DHW uses the following guidelines to determine household income:

- For adults, only the earned and unearned income of the individual applying for services and the earned and unearned income of the individual’s spouse is considered.
- For children, only the earned and unearned income of the birth or adoptive parents and the unearned income of the child for whom services are being requested are considered.
- Income from SSI, SSDI, and adoption subsidy is not considered in calculating family income. The individual receiving SSI or SSDI is not counted in calculating the size of the household.
- The assets of the adult applying for services and the assets of the parents of a child, for whom services are being requested, are not used in calculating household income.
