

Communities across the country are taking steps to lessen the impact of COVID-19, an infection from a novel (new) coronavirus that has become a world-wide pandemic. While most people who contract the disease will only experience mild symptoms, or no symptoms at all, it can cause serious health issues for some people. Since this at-risk group includes many who are residents in certified family homes across Idaho, it is important that CFH providers take precautions to prevent this illness from spreading. These precautions are described on the Center for Disease Control and Prevention webpage "How to Protect Yourself." Please take the time to read and follow the information on this webpage. This website also includes many other webpages relating to the disease.
